

CONTENTS

EDITORS' NOTES	1
Sherry L. Hoppe, Bruce W. Speck
1. Identifying and Nurturing Potential Academic Leaders	3
Sherry L. Hoppe
Ensuring a pipeline of new academic administrators requires careful identification of candidates with desirable characteristics and multiple ways to develop needed skills.
2. From the Other Side of the Academy to Academic Leadership Roles: Crossing the Great Divide	13
Patricia C. Land
Shrinking pools of applicants and changing leadership requirements for chief academic officers may open doors for aspiring academic leaders outside traditional career paths.
3. Six Critical Issues for Midlevel Leadership in Postsecondary Settings	21
Gary L. Filan, Alan T. Seagren
Six principles of leadership form the basis for training at the Academy for Leadership Training and Development in Arizona.
4. The Role of Professional Development in Preparing Academic Leaders	33
Shirley C. Raines, Martha Squires Alberg
Academicians-turned-administrators need professional development to facilitate their transition and to prepare them to serve effectively.
5. The Role of Doctoral Programs in Preparing Faculty for Multiple Roles in the Academy	41
Bruce W. Speck
Doctoral programs currently prepare faculty for research and scholarship but fail to include preparation for collegiality and service, thus leaving faculty with deficits in areas requisite for administrative roles.
6. Faculty Governance and Effective Academic Administrative Leadership	57
Susan Whealler Johnston
Effective academic administrators need to understand and respect the role of faculty governance in decision making and in achieving desired ends in the academy.

7. Selected Legal Aspects of Academic Administrative Leadership: An Orientation for New Academic Administrators 65
Charles R. Jenkins
Academic administrators face an almost overwhelming body of legal parameters governing their actions. This chapter is a good primer for those new to leadership roles in the academy.
8. Promoting Diversity in Academic Leadership 79
Oscar C. Page
Servant leadership can form the basis in colleges and universities for a commitment to a diverse culture where constituents' needs are recognized and served.
9. The Rewards of Academic Leadership 87
Christina Murphy
Extrinsic rewards for academic leaders are easily identifiable but may provide less motivation than intrinsic factors in influencing commitment to organizational and societal priorities.
10. Bedside Manner and Effective Academic Administrative Leadership 95
Daryl Gilley
Effective bedside manner hinges on an understanding of the personalities of the varied characters in a college or university's landscape and a willingness to adapt communication and interpersonal interactions to fit their needs.